Hitler Admits Soviet Army Wields Power

Adolf Hitler's first effort to start a new axis offensive in Russia appeared to have back-fired today on the blood-stained Kerch peninsula guarding the Criméan "shortcut" to the oil fields of the Caucasus.

to the oil fields of the Caucauss.

Meagre reports of severe fighting on the Kerch front indicated that the Germans and Rumanians had suffered heavy losses in a drive started with strong air support and "new weapons" on May 8, and that they had been hurled back to tight ordginal positions by the Red army, except for small gains on the northern wing.

This version came from British military sources but was supported by a German Radio explanation that the Russians were numerically superior on the Kerch front and had extraordinarily strong fortifications and good air bases.

The Russians after issuing a communique disclosing that our troops wased stubions. The resulting further to leak out and taken the offerentive, permitted nothing further to leak out and today's communique said on the strong for the stron
