U. S. Athletes Will Go to Germany to Protest Still Rings

New York, Dec. 1 — The American Olympic rowing team turned down an offer to compete against the British eight, and went to Germany to protest the use of still rings in the world championship regatta.

The American team, which includes the world record holder in the single scull, William H. Van Dusen, was invited to participate in the regatta against the British. However, they decided to boycott the event and traveled to Germany to protest the use of still rings.
